Ethnomusicology

Ethnomusicology (ISSN 0014-1836), the official organ of the Society for Ethnomusicology, is a refereed journal published three times a year by the University of Illinois Press, 1325 S. Oak St., Champaign, IL 61820, on behalf of the Society. The journal publishes original articles in the field of ethnomusicology, broadly defined. Translations of previously published articles are generally not considered. Contributors need not be members of the Society. The views expressed are the authors’ and not necessarily those of the Society or its officers. Articles and communications pertaining to the journal should be sent to the incoming editor. Books and recordings for review and citations for current publications should be sent to the appropriate editor or bibliographer. The Society for Ethnomusicology also publishes the SEM Newsletter, which functions as a vehicle for the exchange of ideas, news, and information. Readers’ contributions are welcomed and should be sent to the editor of the newsletter. Inquiries pertaining to advertising in the newsletter should be directed to the editors of the newsletter; for advertising in the journal, write to the Journals Advertising Manager, University of Illinois Press.

Information for Authors

Manuscript Submission

Note: Article manuscripts should be submitted to the Editor, Timothy J. Cooley, Dept. of Music, University of California, Santa Barbara, CA 93106-6070.

1. Submit three copies of all material related to the article, a brief biographical data sheet, and an abstract of no more than 100 words. Copies must be printed on one side only, on standard size paper. Authors must obtain in writing all permissions for the publication of material under copyright and submit a copy of the permissions file when the manuscript is first sent to the editor. Authors hold the editor and the Society for Ethnomusicology harmless against copyright claims.

2. Manuscripts must be typed double-spaced (including footnotes, quotations, song texts, references cited, indented material, and captions for illustrations). Copies using single line or one and a half line spacing are not acceptable. Leave 1½" margins on all sides with only the left-hand margin justified.

3. Do not submit original artwork (tables, maps, musical transcriptions, etc.) for review; submit copies. Original artwork may be requested upon acceptance for publication, in which case it must be of sufficient quality to permit direct reproduction.

4. All tables and figures, maps, black-and-white photographs, musical examples, and other illustrative material should have captions and should be presented on separate sheets with notations made as to their location in the manuscript. Each should be mentioned in the body of the text and its approximate position noted in the margin.

5. References cited are carried within the text, e.g., (Rhodes 1955:262), and should be typed double-spaced on a separate sheet alphabetically by author and chronologically for each author. Fig. 16.2, p. 648, of the Chicago Manual of Style, 14th ed. (Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1993) will serve as a model.

6. Acknowledgments are to be presented in a separate paragraph, thusly labeled, at the end of the text, preceding endnotes. Authors who welcome correspondence are encouraged to give their email addresses.

7. Manuscripts submitted to Ethnomusicology should not have been published elsewhere nor should they simultaneously be under review or scheduled for publication in another journal or in a book. Further, if an author submits a paper to Ethnomusicology that is based on material closely related to that in other published or submitted papers or books, the author should explain the relationships among them, in a cover letter to the editor.

8. Manuscripts must be in English and observe United States conventions of usage, spelling, and punctuation. This journal maintains the principles of gender-neutral discourse and the editors thus request authors and reviewers to adhere to these practices. A set of guidelines developed by the Society for Music Theory (SMT) has been adopted by the Society for Ethnomusicology and is posted on the SEM web site.

9. Book, record, and film reviews ordinarily are solicited by the respective review editors, from whom authors will receive instructions. Authors should work footnotes into the body of the review and limit references cited. Authors should submit reviews simultaneously on hard copy and IBM- or Macintosh-compatible computer disk.

10. In order to preserve anonymity in the review process, authors should refrain from using headers or footers that include their name. When possible, authors should submit reviews electronically as e-mail attachments, or as directed by the review editor.
MANUSCRIPT PROCESSING

1. A manuscript is read first by the editor, who determines if it is of sufficient interest to proceed further. If not, the editor notifies the author that this is the case. If the manuscript is of sufficient interest, it is sent to outside referees who send written evaluations and recommendations, sometimes with suggestions for revision, to the editor. The editor may reject the manuscript, delay a decision while encouraging revisions, or accept it substantially as is. Ordinarily, the editor will forward the referees' evaluations (anonymously) along with their decisions. Authors of articles may suggest names of appropriate (and inappropriate) referees.

2. The review process is generally completed within four months. Authors will be notified if there is a delay.

3. Articles and reviews are accepted for publication subject to editing for style. Authors of articles will have an opportunity to make final changes after copyediting, and to correct printer's errors in page proof.

Authors of articles will receive ten copies of the journal free of charge; authors of reviews will receive two copies.

For authorization to photocopy from Ethnomusicology for uses exceeding those permitted by Sections 107 and 108 of the U.S. Copyright Law, contact the Copyright Clearance Center (CCC), 222 Rosewood Drive, Danvers, MA 01923. The CCC code for Ethnomusicology is 0014-1836. The CCC will send an invoice for permissions fees. Permissions given above do not extend to copying for advertising or promotional purposes or to creating new collective works.
Notes on Contributing Authors

Megan M. Bakan received the Ph.D. in cognitive psychology from Florida State University. She specializes in basic reading processes of adults and children and has conducted research investigating cognitive impairments in reading and spelling. She currently serves as Research Associate for the Dyslexia Research Registry at the National Institutes of Health Learning Disabilities Center at Florida State University.

Michael B. Bakan is Associate Professor of Ethnomusicology at Florida State University, where he directs both the Balinese gamelan program and the Music-Play Project. He has published on gamelan music, medical ethnomusicology, multicultural music education, jazz history, world percussion, and electronic music technology, and is the author of two books: Music of Death and New Creation: Experiences in the World of Balinese Gamelan Beleganjur (Chicago, 1999) and World Music: Traditions and Transformations (McGraw-Hill, 2007). Bakan edits the Routledge Focus on World Music series and formerly edited the ABC-CLIO World Music series.

Rachel Goff is a graduate student in the Division of Speech and Hearing Sciences at the University of North Carolina. She received her undergraduate degree at Florida State University. Her current research focuses on individuals with aphasia and their family members and friends, examining their responses on a card-sorting task of present and preferred life activities. Other interests include early interventions for children with autism, and attention and distraction in individuals with neurological impairments.

Sally Kahn is a graduate student in the Division of Speech and Hearing Sciences at Vanderbilt University. She received her undergraduate degree in Communication Sciences and Disorders at Florida State University. She completed her undergraduate thesis on the gestures and vocalizations of children who are late bloomers and children who are language delayed. Her current research interests include children who are language delayed as well as children with autism.
Jay Keister, Assistant Professor, is an Ethnomusicologist and scholar of Japanese music. Dr. Keister received the M.A. and Ph.D. in Ethnomusicology from the University of California, Los Angeles. His research concerns individual agency in music, embodiment of music traditions, aesthetics of music, and traditional social structures in contemporary musical practice. His book Shaped by Japanese Music (Routledge, 2004) is the result of his research on traditional performance practice in contemporary Japan and his training in traditional Japanese strings, flutes, and percussion. He has published articles on Japanese music in the journals Asian Music and The World of Music.

Fred A Kobylarz, MD, MPH, is a Family Physician/Geriatrician and Associate Professor in the Department of Family Medicine at the University of Medicine and Dentistry—Robert Wood Johnson Medical School (UMDNJ-RWJMS) in New Brunswick, New Jersey. He formerly served on the faculty of the Department of Geriatrics at the Florida State University College of Medicine (FSUCOM) in Tallahassee, Florida. He has authored various publications on cross-cultural communication and health literacy.

Benjamin Koen, Assistant Professor of Ethnomusicology at Florida State University, specializes in medical, cognitive, and applied ethnomusicology. He is widely published, editor of The Oxford Handbook of Medical Ethnomusicology (in press), and author of Beyond the Roof of the World: Music, Prayer, and Healing in the Pamir Mountains (Oxford, in press). Koen’s holistic approaches often integrate ethnographic and health science methods and research designs to explore multiple issues of music, health, and healing in cultural and clinical contexts.

Lindee Morgan, Ph.D., CCC-SLP, is Director of the Center for Autism and Related Disabilities at Florida State University. She is a Co-Investigator on grants from CDC and NIH involving prevalence and behavioral phenotype of autism spectrum disorders (ASD) in young children. She is also the Project Coordinator for an NIH grant providing caregiver implemented intervention to toddlers with ASD. Her recent research and publications have focused on comparison of the prelinguistic and repetitive behaviors of toddlers with autism and developmental delays.

Alex Perullo is an Assistant Professor of Ethnomusicology and African Studies at Bryant University. His research interests include popular music, youth and urban society, and intellectual property rights in eastern and central Africa. He is currently completing a manuscript on the music industry in Tanzania. He has published articles in Africa Today, Popular Music and Society, and several edited volumes. He is also co-editor of the EVIA Digital Archive.
Lorraine Plourde is a Ph.D. candidate in Sociocultural Anthropology at Columbia University and is currently completing her dissertation entitled, “Difficult Music: Discourses of Listening, Knowledge and Performance in Tokyo’s Avant-Garde Music Community.” She holds an M.A. in Ethnomusicology from the University of Washington and a BA in Music/Asian Studies from Hampshire College.

Sarah Weiss is Assistant Professor of Music at Yale University. Primarily working with performers in Indonesia and elsewhere in Asia, she has published on gender, aesthetics, theater, and hybridity in musical contexts. Her book Listening to an Earlier Java: Gender, Aesthetics, and the Music of Wayang in Central Java was published by the KITLV Press in 2006. She is currently writing a comparative book on women and performance in world religions. Her most recent fieldwork has been with a cappella singing groups at Yale, a continuing project she is conducting with her graduate students. She serves on a variety of editorial boards and committees for music journals and societies.
