Vernacular Architecture

Henry Glassie

Based on thirty-five years of fieldwork, Glassie's Vernacular Architecture synthesizes a career of concern with traditional building.

He articulates the key principles of architectural analysis, and then, centering his argument in the United States, but drawing comparative examples from many locations in Europe and Asia, he shows how architecture can be a prime resource for the one who would write a democratic and comprehensive history.

The Hebrew Folktale

History, Genre, Meaning

Eli Yassif

Foreword by Dan Ben-Amos

Translated from Hebrew by

Jacqueline S. Teitelbaum

Winner 1999 Shalom Aleichem Award for the Study of Jewish Literature

The Hebrew Folktale seeks to find and define the folk-elements of Jewish culture. Through the use of generic distinctions and definitions developed in folkloristics, Yassif describes the major trends—structural, thematic, and functional—of folk narrative in the central periods of Jewish culture.

Missing Stories: An Oral History of Ethnic and Minority Groups in Utah

LESLIE G. KELEN AND EILEEN HALLET STONE

"[This] is a beautiful book, an important book, ... an exemplary book."

—The Public Historian

Overwhelmed by a white, religious majority in the state, many minority groups in Utah have been regarded as "unessential to the state's public life" (p. xi). Ironically, the majority culture has been the whetstone against which these minority groups have honed their senses of themselves. Kelen and Stone have artfully assembled personal interviews, photographs, and essays into an important collection that addresses the tough issues facing minority groups, not just in Utah, but in the West as a whole.

Children's Folklore: A Source Book

BRIAN SUTTON-SMITH, JAY MECHLING, THOMAS W. JOHNSON, AND FELICIA R. MCMAHON, EDITORS

A collection of original essays by scholars from a variety of fields—including American studies, folklore, anthropology, psychology, sociology, and education. Their discussion moves beyond traditional social-science views of child development and reveals the complex and artistic interactions among children, challenging traditional stereotypes.

"Alas, Poor Ghost!": Traditions of Belief in Story and Discourse

offers a clear and thought-provoking discussion of the nature and patterns of belief in the supernatural. Focusing on contact with deceased relatives, which was especially emphasized and recounted by her informants, Bennett discusses the role of bereavement in the occurrences, examines how and why narratives are employed to account for personal experiences, and relates other case studies in the history of ghosts and visitations.

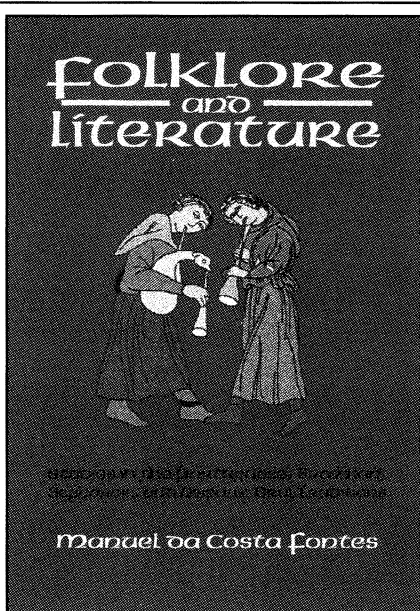

Drawing on modern field research among elderly women in England and historical research in supernatural traditions, Bennett

Studies in the Portuguese, Brazilian, Sephardic, and Hispanic Oral Traditions

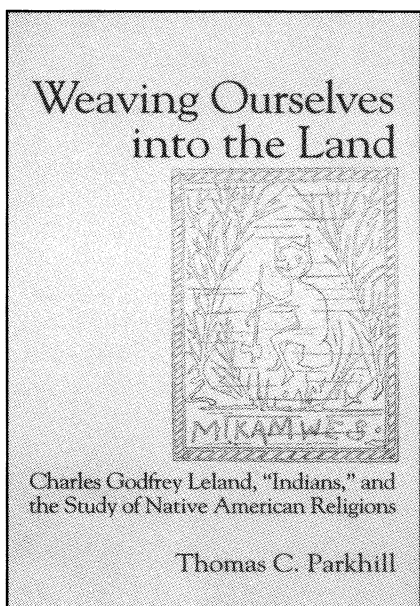

MANUEL DA COSTA FONTES

"Few scholars have the ability to present the complex topic of folklore dissemination with the thoroughness, accuracy, and amenity displayed throughout Fontes's work. This is a very solid contribution to the field of medieval and renaissance studies and it is equally valuable for any scholar interested in Jewish, Portuguese, and Spanish oral traditions."

Charles Godfrey Leland, "Indians," and the Study of Native American Religions

THOMAS C. PARKHILL

Examines how both negative and positive stereotypes of the "Indian" have influenced the study of Native American religions.

"Thom Parkhill's critique of positive stereotyping is much needed. His setting conceptions of 'the Indian' deeply in cultural history render his insights on this kind of stereotyping superior to anything currently in print on the subject."

ONE HUNDRED YEARS OF AMERICAN FOLKLORE STUDIES

A CONCEPTUAL HISTORY

William M. Clements, editor

Published on the occasion of the AFS centennial, in 1988, One Hundred Years of American Folklore Studies is an important set of reflections on the principles on which American folklore was established and the directions indicated by those principles. Such reflections can inform the discipline as it contemplates the pursuit of folklore studies in the 21st century.

One Hundred Years of American Folklore Studies is now selling for $3.50. (Virginia residents add 4.5% sales tax. MasterCard and VISA accepted for orders of $10.00 or more. Prepayment is required for all orders.)

Information for Contributors

Journal of American Folklore, the quarterly journal of the American Folklore Society since the society's founding in 1888, publishes scholarly articles, essays, notes, and commentaries directed to a wide audience, as well as separate sections devoted to reviews of books, exhibitions and events, sound recordings, films and videotapes, and obituaries. The contents of the journal reflect a wide range of professional concerns and theoretical orientations. Articles present significant research findings and theoretical analyses from folklore and related fields. Essays are interpretive, speculative, or polemic. Notes are narrower in scope and focus on a single, often provocative, issue of definition, interpretation, or amplification. Commentaries briefly address topics raised in earlier articles. The views expressed in the journal are those of the authors and do not necessarily reflect those of the society or its officers.

Article manuscripts are acknowledged on receipt and are generally evaluated by the editor and by two anonymous referees. The review process may take only a few weeks but sometimes takes several months. Authors are notified as soon as a decision has been made to accept or reject a manuscript; rejection may be outright or with the possibility of revision and resubmission for a new evaluation. The editor reserves the right to reject or return for revision any material submitted, on the grounds of inappropriate subject matter, quality, or length. When a manuscript is submitted to the Journal of American Folklore it should not have been published elsewhere or be under consideration by any other journal.

Reviews and review articles are generally requested by the review editors, but the editors welcome queries from scholars concerned with particular areas of folklore research and expressions of willingness to review from scholars with particular expertise. Colleagues who wish to write an obituary should address the editor.

Each article-length manuscript must begin with a 50-to-75-word abstract that summarizes the essential points and findings of the essay.

Authors should submit three copies (original and two xerographic or additional ribbon copies; carbon copies are not acceptable) of manuscripts for editorial review. Scholars from countries where there is limited access to copying facilities may submit one copy. All manuscripts must be typed and double spaced (including abstract, notes, references, tables, figure captions, quotations, and references cited) on one side only of good quality 8½-by-11-inch or A4 paper; onionskin or erasable paper is not acceptable. Notes, references cited, tables, and captions should each begin on a new page. Leave a margin of at least one inch on all four edges of the paper; articles typed on A4 paper should have a bottom margin of at least two inches. Authors using word processors should turn right justification off; manuscripts prepared on dot matrix printers are acceptable only if letter characters have true descenders. Number all pages consecutively, including the notes, references cited, tables, figures, and captions, in the upper-right corner; author last names should immediately precede page numbers. The list of references cited should not include any publication not cited in the text; the list is not a bibliography. Any standard format for style, notes, and references is suitable for editorial consideration, but authors of accepted articles must submit final copy in standard JAF format.

The Journal of American Folklore generally follows the 14th edition of The Chicago Manual of Style (Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1993). The journal's style guide appears in issue No. 400. A copy of the style guide may be obtained by writing directly to the editor; please enclose a self-addressed stamped envelope. For spelling, refer to Webster's Third New International Dictionary (1986) or the latest edition of its abridgment, Merriam-Webster's Collegiate Dictionary. If two or more spellings are given, use the first. In all quotations from printed text, the actual spelling in the original is used. Authors should avoid unnecessary use of gender-specific language.

Manuscripts will not be returned unless they are accompanied by return postage. Unsolicited article-length manuscripts by persons who are not members of the American Folklore Society must be accompanied by a nonrefundable processing fee of $15.00. Authors may choose to join the society at the time they submit a manuscript. (See inside front cover for membership information. Checks for membership or manuscript processing should be made out to the American Folklore Society.) Manuscripts that have been solicited by the editor are not subject to this fee.
