Mission Statement: The Journal of Animal Ethics is devoted to the exploration of progressive thought about animals. It is multidisciplinary in mission and nature and international in scope. It covers theoretical and applied aspects of animal ethics—of interest to academics and the practitioners and the scientists, as well as professionals working in the field of animal protection.

Complete instructions and guidelines for submitting a manuscript for consideration are located at www.press.uillinois.edu/journals/jane/submissions.html.

Information for Authors: The Journal of Animal Ethics is a journal of inquiry, argument, and exchange dedicated to exploring the moral dimension of our relations with animals. The editors are therefore interested in receiving pioneering studies that relate to human interaction with animals, but this goal does not mean that either an ethical focus or clearly demonstrate relevance to ethical issues.

Submissions should fall into one of these four categories: full-length articles: normally 3,000 to 5,000 words, though longer articles will be considered; argument pieces: normally 1,000 to 2,000 words, in which an author argues for a specific point of view, replies to a previously published article or review, or offers commentary in response to a topical issue, review articles: normally 2,000 to 3,000 words, based on a published work that merits particular consideration, and book reviews normally up to 1,000 words, and which are usually commissioned, though we welcome reviews of historical or classical works that merit further consideration.

General Requirements: The Journal does not consider multiple submissions or articles that are under consideration by another journal or conference. Submissions should be well-argued to a high level of philosophical sophistication. Authors must take care to offer well-crafted and reasoned pieces.

Technical terms must be explained and an English translation supplied for all non-English words used. The editors will not accept work that, though meritorious, is unnecessarily obscure or verbose, or that overstates technical language. The editors will not publish material that justifies or advocates cruelty to animals.

In addition to the normal policies against libelous and discriminatory language, all authors should avoid derogatory or colloquial language or nomenclature that degrades animals (or humans by association), including such terms as “beasts,” “brutes,” “bestial,” “beady-eyed,” “dumb animals,” “subhumans,” additionally, “company animals,” “Legless,” “free-living,” or “free-ranging” rather than “wild,” and “carnivores” rather than “omnivores.” “He” or “she” should be utilized in relation to individual animals rather than “it.” An “exception should be made in the quotation of texts, particularly historical writings.

Submissions must be formatted as Microsoft Word documents and sent as e-mail attachments. All material submitted will be peer-reviewed in accordance with a two-stage process: (1) review by the editors and, if necessary, (2) review by editorial advisers. Our aim is to make decisions within a maximum period of 3 months.

Authors of full-length articles are required to provide a concise abstract of no more than 100 words, with key words for indexing. (See Style Guide requirements that follow.)

All authors, even of shorter pieces, are required to provide a paragraph of biography comprising (in this order) full name, institutional affiliation(s), special qualifications or honors, titles of up to three books published, areas of research, and e-mail address.

The editors will not accept material sent via postal mail. All submissions should arrive via e-mail to Professor Andrew Linzey at journals@uillinois.edu or visit the website at: www.press.uillinois.edu.
